Quantified proof: a real number, from a named source, in the first two lines. Not an adjective. Not a promise.

01 A number beats a question

Opening with a precise number lifts median likes 17%. Opening with a question drops them 28%. Same idea, different first line.

02 Say who, when, how much

Posts high on specificity beat their own baseline 68% of the time. Vague ones land at 50% — a coin flip.

The line that decides it

GETS SCROLLED PAST

AI is changing how teams work. Here are my thoughts.

GETS READ

We cut 9 hours a week off one report. The tool cost nothing.

“

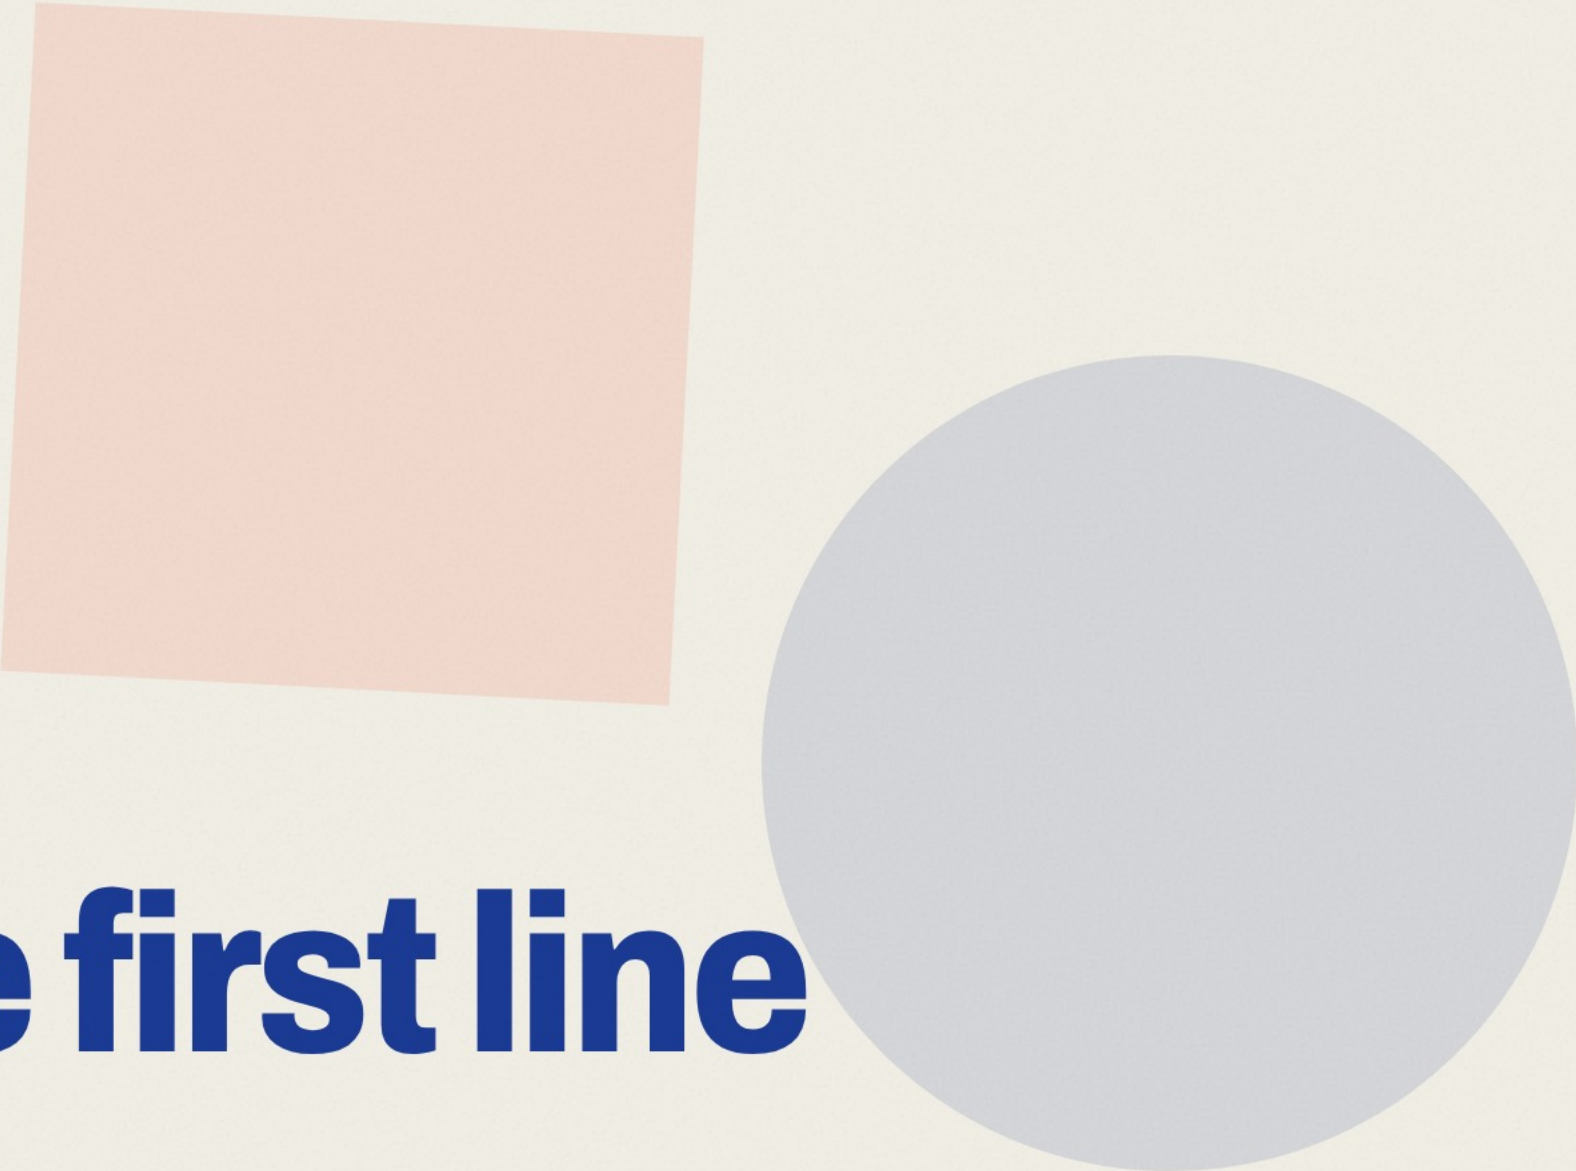

Specificity is the moat: a date, a number, a detail only you could know.

It is also the one thing a model cannot invent for you.

03 Imperative hooks are dead

“Stop doing this” scores 0.02× on engagement lift. It reads as a command from a stranger, and the feed treats it that way.

DO THIS TODAY

Rewrite one first line

Take your last post. Replace the opening question with the most specific number you can defend. Keep everything else.

One idea, decoded, every week

Plain English, a real source, and one thing to do with it.
